LISTENING TO THE LAND FOR SPIRITUAL DIRECTION

In a highly urbanized world of alienation and exploitation, both the sciences and the humanities are finding truth and strength in listening carefully to the land. In the same vein, religious movements are discovering anew the sacredness of creation. In our humble homecoming, the land herself offers us spiritual direction. At the same time, endowed with creativity and curiosity, we are called to listen with the land in such a way that witnesses the revelation of holiness in her. This is the art of spiritual direction, a discipline of attentive accompaniment with its own skills and teachings. This talk will explore how we both receive and give spiritual direction through gentle listening to the land.
